Excerpt: . . . of a few facts, and the inferences to be drawn from a general intimate acquaintance therewith. The ordinary visitor or tourist in his rambles about New York can see enough to satisfy his curiosity and give him the feeling that he has obtained a good general acquaintance with the city, and yet see but little as compared with the vast aggregate of human effort that is stored up on Manhattan Island and within the circle of its natural suburbs that are tributary to it. There are thousands who have resided there for many years and have seen but a fraction of all its multifarious interests, or the extent of its municipal possessions lying even between its two great rivers. It is only when persons go there for the purpose of observation and the investigation of specific interests, availing of all the channels of information in the line of the object they have in view, that they can fully appreciate and comprehend the vast interests, the rapid changes, the wonderful activities of its business life, and the marvellous progress of the times in which we live. From these varied conditions of life and the diversified interests of business, in commerce, trade, and manufacturers, there may be drawn most useful lessons of great value to all who have the desire or inclination carefully to investigate them. PUBLIC PARKS. What would most likely be the conditions existing in New York and Brooklyn to-day without the Central Park...
