EXAMPLES. At Busaco the French columns of attack were weakened as they advanced, and before they could reach the crest of the hill they were charged with descending impulse and hurled back; roads of communication had been so skilfully made that 10,000 men could pass at the accelerated pace to reinforce a point attacked. This is the true defensive-offensive system of Caesar and Chap. iii. Wellington, and will always enable the men of England to x hurl back any insane invaders. The French adopted this system at the battle of Toulouse; Napier defending the culvenet platform, the bridge of Jumeaux,...
