Why do bad things happen to good people? Does the fact of evil in the world prove that God does not exist? Can modern science help us answer those questions? These are the subjects of my manuscript, provisionally titled: Where was God: Evil, Theodicy, and Modern Science. John Milton in his epic poem, Paradise Lost, includes the line: to justify the ways of God to men. Although Milton wrote this several centuries ago, the idea that God s ways needed justifying goes back thousands of years. Justification of Evil is an ancient conundrum. Whenever religions evolve to posit a Supreme Being, the Problem of Evil arises. There is something very disconcerting with belief in such a Being, who is supposed to reward you for righteousness, verses the fact that He does not appear to do so. This causes the psychological disconnects of cognitive dissonance and logic-tight compartmental thinking. We seem to be able to hold two inconsistent ideas in our minds at the same time, but when the compartmentalizing fails, we are driven to explain the resulting dissonance. With the Problem of Evil, this means developing theodicies. Theodicy is the term for addressing the philosophical and theological Problem of Evil by attempting to justify the actions of God to man. This book examines the historical theodicies of the mono/heno-theistic religions of ancient Persia, Israel, and Greece. It then explores the historical development of theodicies from the earliest Christian sects, continuing through Christian orthodoxy to the present day. All statements of the Problem involve inconsistencies, where we have a logical trilemma: God is all-powerful; God is all-good; Evil...
